Being black is being beautiful; not just beauty of the skin but of the soul.

My face is black, my heart is fearless, promises, pain and pressure you must learn to live with.

Being black is being slick, sly, and smart enough to keep your neck out of a loop.

Fighting to survive is all a part of being beautiful, bold and black.

By Elizabeth Brown

Let me be poor, humble and in rags but leave me my pride

Take away my home, my car, my bank account but don’t mess with my pride

Talk about me, scorn and abuse

Torture, oppress and misuse me, but leave me my pride

For my pride is me
Without it I am nothing
With it I’m anything and everything
That’s why “you can’t destroy me

“I have my pride”

By Roberta Spencer

FALL CONVOCATION 1972
FALL CONVOCATION

The dynamic speaker, Dr. Jeffery Whisenton, delivered the Fall Convocation message.

RECOMMENDATION

Each year Lane brings back one of her children to speak for Religious Emphasis Week. This year Col. William Smith was our speaker for the week.

STAFF’S "PET PEEVES"

“Well, darling, come back when you have some money.”

“Aright, start bobbing.”

“And it really works, huh.”

“Don't knock it, sister, until you've tried it.”
THE UNLOCKED TRAP

A vacuum of frightened, enclosed, thoughts: a raging battle of inner emptiness; a chain of tales that the past brought, the clinging solitude of loneliness.

A deep, dark, pit; predicting your next step, a candid waiting to be lit; you've missed the happiness you should have felt.

You forge ahead in hope of finding a mate of the same magnitude. The rushing state of not knowing engulfs your emotions; never progressing, always regressing.

You've been cut out on the dotted line, and pasted together like a paper doll. The shades of not knowing become darker; the persistent urge to know becomes an obsession. A product of a pre-molded character is your confession.

The ticks of clocks have made you "your" "being" screams for release. To break the lock, your strength must be increased. The trap was set, and they threw away the key.
